

A lot of the Marshall Islands don't even have internet, and communications as a discipline has turned into a very 3.0 country-type discipline. so a lot of the Marshall Islands would need to start from the bottom and work their way up

How does the Marshall Islands educate it's citizens to be better communicators?

How can the communications help the Marshall Islands?

"Redefining what it means to be a person of the country you're living in"
The U.S. is so focused on preparing its' future generation in engineering, and other science-based disciplines, because that defines success. Disciplines such as art, music, education, journalism, etc. are rapidly going off the deep end, because they cannot benefit the countries' economy as well as something like medicine or engineering can. It's disheartening.

The Marshall Islands does have a newspaper

Discipline Perspective

U.S./Discipline Perspective

Education day 2

